Billy Greer

A single leaf on a tree makes the tree look barren, dormant, unfruitful. But when the tree is in bloom with many leaves covering its branches, its fullness and color make the tree alive, vibrant and productive. I think of the Virginia Wesleyan Annual Fund in much the same way. Many individual gifts combine to make a significant impact on the lives of our students.

Endowed scholarships, professorships, book funds, capital projects, and bequests sustain this College and enable it to grow. There is always a lot of excitement when a $1-million gift is received. But at Virginia Wesleyan, we know that gifts of $25, $100 or $250 combine in a significant way to allow the College to offer the very best educational experience possible for our students. Consider the following impact of small donations:

- Twenty-four gifts of $250 provide financial aid for one student. (Last year, 85 percent of our students received institutional financial aid awards averaging $5,886.)
- Seventeen gifts of $100 purchase one computer. (Sixty-five new computers were installed on campus.)
- Four gifts of $25 purchase and place one book in the library. (Nearly 2,000 new books were acquired for the library.)
- One gift of $25 allows a student to receive two hours of help from the Learning Center. (Approximately 175 students per semester received assistance from the Learning Center.)

The accumulated value of small gifts is undeniable. They add up to large things and make a tremendous difference in the quality of programs and services the College can offer. As a matter of fact, if every one of the 9,800 Virginia Wesleyan family members reading this letter gave $25 today, the College would have $245,000 available right now for its most essential needs.

But there is another part of this picture - these gifts must continue every year. Scholarships, classroom resources, faculty salaries - all are annual, ongoing investments that are worthy of support at the highest, most consistent levels possible.

You will notice that this year's Annual Report to Donors gives special recognition to Annual Fund donors of $100 or more whose Annual Fund giving has been continuous for five years or more. We are grateful for their loyalty and are appreciative of every gift from every donor.

Your gift is more important than ever in less-than-ideal economic times. If we all join together, our individual gifts make a big difference. So when you get a phone call or receive a fund-raising letter from one of our volunteers, please make a gift in support of Virginia Wesleyan and its students and know that your single leaf will indeed make a difference.

BILLY GREER
President, Virginia Wesleyan College

Robert W. Coltenberg

Thank you! On behalf of all Virginia Wesleyan alumni, I extend my thanks to each and every donor listed in these pages. Your gifts are deeply appreciated and are excellent investments in our current and future students - or as we Alumni Association board members like to think of them - alumni-in-training!

Two vibrant communities, The United Methodist Church and the Hampton Roads area, breathed life into this fine College through their tireless involvement and financial commitment. Forty years later their efforts continue to shape lives, enabling students to receive an outstanding education, both in academics and in life.

Since my own graduation in 1990, I have been closely involved with Virginia Wesleyan as a donor, a volunteer, a member of the Alumni Association board of directors and currently as its president. It has been my honor to represent the College on numerous occasions, and I have become increasingly aware of the tremendous importance of involvement.

Involvement takes many forms, and I encourage all alumni to find a way to stay connected with the College. Joining the Alumni Association and participating in its activities is one way to contribute to Virginia Wesleyan. You may also choose to attend Wesleyan athletic and cultural events, provide student internships, refer qualified students to the Admissions Office, volunteer as a class agent and speak positively about the College to friends and professional colleagues. Each of us, alumni or friend of the College, can remain involved and connected. Undoubtedly, financial support provides a significant and perhaps the easiest way to remain involved with Virginia Wesleyan. It is a way to participate in the life of the College, and each of us should accept that opportunity gladly.

Virginia Wesleyan is 40 years old, and it is time for alumni to recognize and accept the responsibility for its governance and its financial future. The Alumni Association Board of Directors is working hard to communicate this concept to its constituency. Our board is actively involved in a broad range of programs that encourage alumni visibility and participation in many aspects of the College's life. Alumni serve on the President's Advisory Council, Parents Council and the Women of Wesleyan board. Currently the College's Board of Trustees has two members who are alumni, and there are plans for this number to grow.

Financial commitment has been more difficult to achieve. I am proud to say that 100 percent of the members of the Alumni Association board have participated in the Virginia Wesleyan Annual Fund for the past two years. While the national average of alumni giving at private liberal arts colleges is 31.5 percent, only 9.5 percent of Wesleyan alums made a gift to the College last year. Alumni giving is a significant factor that corporations and foundations consider in awarding grants. Many other potential donors look at the activity of those closest to the institution. Participation matters. Simply stated, a college's alumni body is expected to support the school that provided their education. If we as alumni don't give, why should anybody else?

The 2001-2002 Annual Report to Donors acknowledges and celebrates those who continue to invest in Virginia Wesleyan College. I encourage you to give generously every year. I challenge my fellow alumni who are not current contributors to consider the many ways you can become involved in your alma mater and become a donor before June 30, 2003.

It's impossible to miss Jane Batten's contributions to Virginia Wesleyan College. Step onto campus, and there is the building that bears her name: The Jane P. Batten Student Center. Opened in February 2002 and dedicated during the College's 40th Anniversary Gala in June, the 137,000-square-foot Center offers something for everyone in the Virginia Wesleyan community. Called "the heart of campus" by one member of the faculty, it offers a central place to gather, compete and celebrate thanks to Frank and Jane Batten's generous $10-million donation. Of course, the donation is not the first the Batten family has made to the College. One exceptional student each year receives a full scholarship when selected as the Jane P. Batten Scholar.

Maybe it was daughter Mary who sold Batten on Virginia Wesleyan – back when she was a freshman, and she took her mother on a campus tour. Maybe it was another relative, M. Lee Payne, who had served as a trustee from 1969 to 1983 and encouraged Batten to become involved. Or maybe it was Batten's own enthusiasm for education. Perhaps all these reasons influenced her, because she has given generously to the College and volunteered countless hours as a member of the Board of Trustees, where she currently serves on the executive and nominating committees.

As Chair of the Board of Trustees from 1995 -1998 and of the "Consider the Harvest" capital campaign from 1993 until 1998, Batten oversaw the largest fund-raising effort in Virginia Wesleyan's history. Her leadership resulted in more than $36 million in gifts, pledges and deferred commitments to the College during that campaign. Virginia Wesleyan President Billy Greer summed up Batten's dedication when he said, "Jane Batten provided the energy and legitimacy we needed for this campaign. Her work was tireless. She went on calls with me and with others. Over and over, she told the story of this College. She was the most essential piece of the campaign's success."

Batten explained why she has worked so hard for the College by observing, "This is a college that values people. And having the chance to know those bright-eyed, eager students, the dedicated staff, the wonderfully gifted faculty, our hardworking and generous trustees, our loyal alumni – that's what has given me such joy. To be part of the Wesleyan family."

Robert W. Collenberg

ROBERT W. COLLEBERG II

Bobby Collenberg '90 is a busy man. The Liberal Arts Management Program graduate is a general contractor specializing in remodeling and additions. He is also involved with two family businesses, The Shutter Door, an antiques and interiors shop, and Affordable Art, which does professional framing. With his wife Julie, he spends time on his boat, travels and entertains.

But regardless of his busy schedule, Collenberg always makes time for Virginia Wesleyan.

During this past year, Collenberg helped plan and host the second annual "Party in the Garden," a social and fund-raising event sponsored by the Alumni Association, of which he is the president of the board of directors. The "Party in the Garden" is a popular event that includes a silent auction and a venue for alumni to reconnect with each other, the College and their professors. Collenberg has been known to plan, decorate and even clean-up after this May event. Collenberg next turned his attention to the 40th Anniversary Gala, held two weeks later on June 6, as the capstone event of a year-long celebration. He offers a simple reason for being so involved: "I've always felt strongly about the school. It's an extension of my family. I'm fond of everyone there. That's why I do the most I can for the College."

Collenberg has been an active volunteer and donor since 1997. His leadership role with the Alumni Association requires a significant time commitment. The executive committee meets at least twice a month, and the entire board gathers five times a year. Then there's work to be done for campus events and fund-raising efforts – orientation, homecoming and reunions. To support the Annual Fund, Collenberg writes letters, makes phone calls and recruits others to do the same. Last year the Alumni Association board of directors set a goal of 100-percent board participation by the members in the Annual Fund and it should come as no surprise that they reached it. "We made it the first time we tried to do it," Collenberg says. "It's obvious everyone on the Alumni board feels strongly about the school."

Collenberg's connection is so strong, in fact, that he was happy to be asked to serve a second year as president of the board of directors. "I don't want to just be in the audience. I like being more active than that," Collenberg says. His dream? "Maybe by the 50th Anniversary Gala, I'll be on the Board of Trustees."

KATHIE KLEIN KELLY

Kathie Klein Kelly '78 majored in theater and communications as a student at Virginia Wesleyan. The only problem: the college didn't have a theater. "First we used the dining hall, then the chapel," Kelly remembers. Her professors weren't about to let her or any other students use the lack of a theater as an excuse for a less-than-engaging production, though. "Bentley Anderson and Rick Hite were hard on me," she says. "They definitely helped me establish a strong work ethic. They had high expectations and made it clear that everyone had to give 100 percent. All of the students were expected to chip in and do whatever needed doing for each play – from showing up on time for rehearsals, to building the sets, to helping with costumes and props, handing out programs. We learned it was everyone's job to know every aspect of staging a production, and I learned that theater is more than just acting on the stage."

After graduation, Kelly worked in advertising, then in retail, working her way up to vice president of retail operations for a marine supply company. She refers to that as "the best acting job I ever did," since she got the vice president's job without a business degree. "In business it doesn't matter if you're the boss or not. Respect for and knowledge of everyone's job makes you more successful in any project you undertake. I learned that at Virginia Wesleyan, and it holds true today."

She and her husband Doane, a management consultant, live in Basking Ridge, NJ. Since the birth of their two children, now ages 12 and 14, much of Kelly's time has been spent as a volunteer for the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation and the Alzheimer's Association, causes that are particularly important to her because of close family members who were affected by those diseases.

Kelly was thus especially saddened to hear of the death last December of political science professor Edmund "Del" Carlson, who died from complications of diabetes. In a note to Carlson's widow Roseann, she recalled that one of her fondest memories of Virginia Wesleyan was of Dr. Carlson sitting in the library shortly after the Carter/Ford presidential election in 1976, patiently explaining to Kelly, a confused first-time voter, how the Electoral College worked. "The professors were always accessible and displayed the same high standards in themselves that they expected from their students."

Today, Kelly has the "same good feeling" about the College as when she was a student. That's why she has been a regular contributor to the Annual Fund since 1980 and has been a Fellow of the Virginia Wesleyan Society for the past two years. "Giving 100 percent includes giving financially," she says. "My professors would expect nothing less."

In Memory

H. S. ABERNATHY

For 86 years now, H.S. "Ab" Abernathy has lived by a simple rule: "He who gets help should give help." It's a philosophy he learned at home on a farm in rural Brunswick County, Va. As the eighth child of nine, he saw early on that everyone, big and small, was expected to lend a hand. The family's Methodist church delivered the same "give-back" message. So when Abernathy received "scholarship money from someone behind the scenes" that allowed him to enroll at Randolph-Macon College, he did two things: Studied diligently to earn a degree and set a goal to someday return the favor to a deserving student.

Years later, Abernathy and his wife of 54 years, Mavis Eason Abernathy, who died in 2001, watched as Virginia Wesleyan was founded and grew in reputation as a liberal arts college. They both shared the same philosophy about helping others, and they felt as if they were part of the school. Their dedication and devotion to The United Methodist Church, for which Abernathy served many positions including conference president of the United Methodist Men, often brought them to campus. The College, with its focus on developing well-rounded students, reminded Abernathy of his alma mater. And the Abernathys felt one other strong tie to Virginia Wesleyan: Then-President Lambuth Clarke was their friend. All signs pointed them back to their promise of assisting a hard-working student.

The Abernathys established a scholarship at Virginia Wesleyan in 1994, which he continues to support. A promise made more than 60 years ago was honored – as well as two families – by naming it the Abernathy-Eason Scholarship.

ARTHUR W. CARTER

Ask Joyce Howell, professor of art, to describe artist and Virginia Wesleyan supporter Arthur "Art" Carter, and she responds easily: Very decent. Civil. Intelligent. Sophisticated.

Absolutely delightful. An old-school gentleman. "He knew how to put people at ease," explains Howell.

And Carter's talents were as impressive as his personality. "He had fresh ideas as to what constituted an interesting painting," says Howell, who is also the curator of Virginia Wesleyan's art collection. "I welcomed acquisitions of his paintings for the permanent collection." High praise for someone who didn't fully explore art until he was well into his 60s and had retired from an engineering career with the Navy and NASA. That's when Carter came to Virginia Wesleyan and studied with art professor Barclay Sheaks, who helped him turn passion into painting.

At Sheaks' "Art Odyssey" summer painting workshops held on the Eastern Shore, Carter and other students would paint throughout the day. Each afternoon, Sheaks would sit with the group and critique their work. "Art Carter was so wonderful there," Howell recalls. "He was a very supportive member of the group. He worked hard at his paintings, but was always fun-loving and young at heart." Carter thrived at the week-long retreats and on the Virginia Wesleyan campus. This may have been because he was a life-long learner.

In 1980, he established the Arthur Wesley Carter Art Scholarship. He funded this endowed scholarship during his lifetime and enjoyed knowing that his generosity helped students. Carter made sure that the scholarship would have an impact on students and included a bequest in his will to enhance the scholarship, making it one of the largest awards available to art majors. Carter also donated much of his personal art collection to the College, including works by Barclay Sheaks as well as a number of his own original paintings. "I wasn't surprised to learn that Art had made plans to donate money and artwork to the College upon his passing in 2001," says Howell. "He had a strong attachment to Virginia Wesleyan as a place that values intellectual pursuits and open-mindedness. He was at home here. He was part of the art department family."

Philanthropic support for Virginia Wesleyan is a critical element of the College's financial resources and educational program. In a rapidly changing society, colleges need to offer an increasing number of programs requiring additional funds for equipment and other resources. At Virginia Wesleyan, we strive to provide these enhancements to prepare our students for a complex and competitive world. Today, change occurs at a faster pace than a generation ago. A computer designed and built in 1995 cannot handle the basic functions needed for today's classroom or workplace. Virginia Wesleyan, through careful financial planning and stewardship, along with generous philanthropic support, continues to meet these educational challenges.

The Virginia Wesleyan Annual Fund helps provide these resources. In 2001-2002, the Annual Fund accounted for 21 percent of all gifts received by the College, supporting faculty and student needs, scholarships, student activities and other general functions. Scholarships continue to be one of the College's greatest needs. With the opening of the Jane P. Batten Student Center, the College has expanded its offerings in Communications to include a television laboratory. The addition of a classics professor has broadened the overall academic program and has been well received by students.

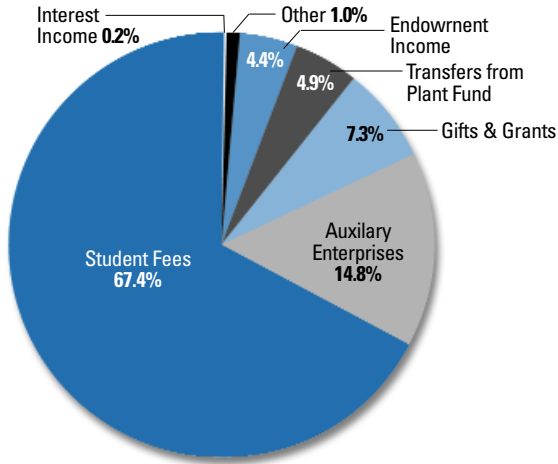

During the last year, Virginia Wesleyan was not immune to the turbulence of the financial markets. Fortunately, the College's endowment suffered minor losses due to the Investment Committee's conservative fiscal policies, finishing the fiscal year with a value just under $20 million. Endowment earnings contributed $1 million to the College's operating expenses. Total charitable giving to the College exceeded $3 million for all purposes. This level of financial support from trustees, alumni, friends and others during a time of fiscal uncertainty reflects the College's strong foundation and provides the stability necessary for future growth.
